In secret deal with Israel? — Franz Joseph Strauss, former West German Defense Minister.

N. Y. TIMES REPORTS

Bonn-Israel A-Deal

HINT STRAUSS VISIT CONNECTED WITH NUCLEAR DEAL

NEW YORK (CJN). — C. L. Sulzberger, head of the N. Y. Times Foreign Service, hinted on Monday that Israel cooperates with West Germany in the production of "A" arms, — made in Israel. — This, according to Sulzberger's dispatch, is the meaning of the Strauss visit to Israel.

Says Sulzberger:

It is fair to ask what Germany is up to in the Middle East. The recent visit to Israel of Herr Strauss, former Defense Minister, was unusual. And the continued presence in Egypt of German scientists and technicians has never been satisfactorily explained.

Let us examine the implications of these apparently contradictory activities. Germany is banned by treaty from manufacture of A.B.C. weapons (atomic, bacteriological and chemical). Adenauer has loyally adhered to this restriction. Nevertheless, two schools of German military thought would like to see advances in weapons technology. One hopes Germany will some day possess not only nuclear warheads but their means of delivery. Another is interested in atomic explosives.

There is not the slightest known evidence of any clandestine German effort to elude restrictions. But curious occurrences prompt questions. Strauss, as Defense Minister, made a secret deal with Israel involving purchase of Israeli machine pistols and supplying other equipment to Israel.

Apart from the sincere wish of many Germans to help survivors of Nazi ghastliness, Israel has a special technical interest through its nuclear reactor at Dimona. This was secretly started during the 1956-57 winter with French aid and was so well disguised that Washington only learned of its existence in 1960. It could have weapons-making capacity. Has Strauss discussed Dimona?

Could it be possible for some secret planning staff to try to gain new knowledge about either atomic explosives, through Israel, or missiles, through Egypt, or both? The hypothetical answer to this hypothetical question is "Yes."

The contradictory implications of Strauss's journey, never explained with convincing logic, and German technicians' activities, too freely tolerated by Bonn, lead to uneasy conjecture. Bonn officially should make detailed explanations of its Israeli accords and punish violators in Egypt of its basic law. This is no time for secret deals or scientific mercenaries. Germany's defense needs can be met through NATO.

Memo To The P.M.

Canada: Two Cultures Only?

by B. G. LITVAK

Questions are being asked whether the Commission on Biculturalism promised by Prime Minister Pearson reflects the true cultural needs of this country. Is all Canada to be divided into two cultural components: the French and the Anglo-Saxon? Or, is there a third component — those groups who stem from neither race and have their own concepts of culture to contribute — the Ukrainian, the Jews, the Poles, Germans, Dutch using these words in their hyphenated sense as applied to persons living in Canada, whether as native or immigrant? Are they to be overlooked simply because there were not enough of them around to matter in 1867 when the two contracting parties were French and English? This element, bolstered by post-war immigration, now constitutes one third of Canada's population and numerically is certainly more than a mere fragment being equal to the other two "original" components.

But, some argue, are these groups culturally viable units such as the French and the English? Despite much talk about cultural pluralism do they actually hope or even intend to survive as culturally distinct groupings in the Canadian environment in this land?

And is there any unanimity among Canadians of Scandinavians, Germanic, or Slavic origin about group or collective autonomy rights in Canada?

There are those who in contemplating the question reject any possibility that we can sit down with the other elements and "bargain" or negotiate for a "Jewish position" for in their mind the Jewish position cannot in any way be identified with the kind of "minority rights" so familiar in Central and Eastern Europe (where incidentally, they were known mainly in the breach).

As for the other groups they maintain that while these have a natural wish to pass their heritage on to theirchildren this is not necessarily for perpetuating separate cultures on this continent but to keep them alive as sub-cultures subordinate to and complementary to the main Anglo-Saxon one which is undoubtedly the predominant one but which will no doubt alter under the many other influences it has been and will be undergoing.

Moscow Notice To Jews:

DON'T TALK TO ISRAELIS!

NEW YORK, (CJN) — Three Moscow Jews were severely attacked in a Soviet newspaper Sunday for alleged dealing with the Israeli Embassy and other foreigners, according to the Herald Tribune.

The Moscow correspondent of the Tribune reports:

Informed sources said the attack in the nationally distributed newspaper Trud (Labor) was similar to press stories that preceded the closing of the Lvov Synagogue, but it was believed that the Moscow Synagogue was too important a showplace for Western tourists to be seriously affected.

But it was noted that the newspaper article was bound to have adverse affect on non-Jews who would be led to believe that Soviet Jews are not proud of their homeland and tend to speculate with religious articles and literature from abroad.

NOTICE TO JEWS—

In addition, the effect upon Moscow Jews would be similar to other anti-Western stories that have appeared in recent weeks — widening the gap between Moscow's Western community and the Russian people. The story, in effect, served notice on Moscow Jews to steer clear of the Israeli Embassy and other foreign Jews.

Singled out in Sunday's attack were Moise Chernukhin, 56; Cyinovy Rogeinski, 66, and Shimon Sheiffer, 80.

An Israeli Embassy spokesman declined to comment on the stories but noted that the last newspaper attack on the Embassy was in January, 1962. In both cases the stories appeared in Trud and were signed by "A. Brchling."

In discussing each of the three men, Trud said Chernukhin's behavior was so disgraceful that he was ousted from membership in the Moscow Synagogue Council of 20, a group that guides the synagogue's affairs. Chernukhin, said Trud, could neither read nor write but was invited last year to the Israeli Embassy for a party honoring the Israeli delegation to the World Congress for Peace and Disarmament. The Israeli delegation included representatives of the arts, literature and science.

An Israeli Embassy spokesman noted that, as an official of the synagogue, Chernukhin was invited to Israeli Embassy functions and that the invitations always went through the rabbi in Moscow as a matter of protocol.

Chernukhin allegedly received Zionist and religious literature from the Israelis.

Rogeinski, according to Trud, left his family a few years ago and began living with a young mistress. He took everything he could to the Israeli Embassy and sold them at speculative prices. When the Embassy gave a party last Oct. 17 in honor of the Jewish New Year, Rogeinski took so many prayer shawls, books, records and magazines that it was impossible to recognize him as he left the Embassy.

Sheiffer, as a pensioner, spent most of his free time in the synagogue. But when a foreigner arrived in the synagogue, Sheiffer was just a step behind, asking for prayer shawls and souvenirs, Trud said.

The article failed to mention that Israeli diplomats are obliged to sit in a special reserved section to prevent ordinary Russians from coming in close contact with them. An officer of the synagogue usually stands between the Israelis and the congregation to prevent conversation of any sort.

The newspaper warned westerners not to invite people like the three men to their parties if they did not wish to be boycotted by "honest Soviet citizens."

Saudia Arabia Now Admits U. S. Jewish Soldiers

WASHINGTON, (CJN) — American servicemen of Jewish faith have been serving in Saudi Arabia for several weeks, despite strong objections in the past by the Saudi Government to their presence there.

A Defense Department spokesman said that their presence had been approved by the Saudi Government.

This reversal of the long-standing Saudi policy that no persons of Jewish faith be among the United States troops assigned to Saudi Arabia was understood to have resulted from recent international developments and not from negotiations.

Israel Replies To Khruschev On Middle East Plan

JERUSALEM, (CJN) Israel replied on Sunday to a Soviet note calling for a nuclear-free Mediterranean with a warning of the growing danger of war in the Middle East and a declaration that the United States and Soviet Russia are "in a position" to achieve Arab-Israel peace.

The government called for "joint and co-ordinated" American-Soviet action to bring about disarmament in the area and to guarantee the territorial integrity of all Mid-Eastern states. It would, the government said, convince the Arab nations that "they divorce themselves from a policy of belligerency" toward Israel.

The statement, re-emphasizing Premier Ben Gurion's recent appeal for Soviet-American action, was contained in an official reply to the May 20 note of the Soviet Union which was sent to the United States, Britain and 13 Mediterranean states.

In its reply Israel informed Russia — which follows a generally pro-Arab policy — that the Arab states continually proclaim their intention of destroying Israel and have stepped up their "war-like preparations by enlarging their armies, by war propaganda and by development of new and destructive varieties of armament."

The Israeli note, released here after presentation in Moscow, was diplomatically worded, but contained an implied criticism of Soviet policy in the region.

"The supply of arms in vast volume to the Arab governments, and especially since the end of 1955 to Egypt, with utter disregard of the policy of belligerency which those states follow, creates a direct threat to Israel and undermines international peace, adding constantly to the risk of a conflagration," the Israeli note said. This was a clear reference to the Soviet bloc which began supplying arms to Egypt in late 1955.

The Israeli reply also took diplomatic exception to "the errors, omissions and inexact interpretations" concerning Israel in the Soviet note. While the Soviet note mentioned the suffering of ancient Mediterranean peoples, Israel said, it ignored the people of Israel.

Also, the note said that nuclear arms are virtually at the walls of the Vatican, Jerusalem and Mecca and mentioned that Christians and Moslems are concerned with the welfare of these cities, but the Soviet statement fails to refer to the Jews in this connection "although Jerusalem is the historic capital of the people of Israel."

The Israeli statement said that Israel welcomes every initiative to work for the prevention of nuclear war, but added that Israel has no nuclear arms and no foreign bases.

BONN:

ADENAUER MAY VISIT ISRAEL

JERUSALEM, (JCNS) — Herr Franz Joseph Strauss, the former West German Defence Minister, left Lydda airport a day later than originally announced. There were no incidents.

Asked about the purpose of his visit, he said he had wished to come to Israel while he was still Minister of Defence but had thought it better to postpone the visit. But when he received a second invitation he gladly seized the opportunity to learn about the problems of Israel, and he hoped his visit would contribute towards deepening the understanding between their two peoples.

Herr Strauss then left the airport in a black car led by a police jeep. The place where he is staying has not been disclosed and his engagements — which included a meeting with Mr. Ben-Gurion and a talk with Mr. Shimon Peres — are being announced only as he fulfils them.

During his ten-day stay Herr Strauss toured the country. He met members of the Press only at the end of his visit.

BONN (JCNS) — A spokesman for the Federal German Government refused to comment on the announcement by Herr Franz-Josef Strauss that Chancellor Adenauer was planning to visit Israel after his retirement.

He also refused to comment on the former minister's statement about the establishment of diplomatic relations between West Germany and the Jewish State.

Herr Strauss' visit to Israed was a private one and he was speaking on his own behalf, the spokesman said.

no jewish problem

The belief that THIS is a Jewish problem is one of the basic errors of some Jewish leaders when faced by manifestations of anti-semitism. First and last, anti-semitism is directed, of course, against Jews. Whether in primitive hoodlum form or a more refined garb, Jew-hatred is a disease which has all the earmarks of an epidemic. We know where it begins —by harrassing or persecuting Jews—but not where it will end.

Indirectly anti-semitism weakens a society by dividing people, by creating fear and mutual distrust. In the end, it is not the Jews alone who pay for it, although we are its main target and victim.

Nevertheless, no matter how much Jews are enfeebled after an assault of anti-semitism, in the final analysis they can never be destroyed. The stupidity of anti-Jewish persecutors, from the biblical Pharaoh up to this day, consists in the fact that they ignore the eternity of our people—and they attack eternity.

* * * *

The late Pope John XXIII truly was one of those noble Christians who understood the Jewish phenomenon. Whether Jews believe that our organizations should or should not cooperate with the Ecumenical Council, the fact remains that Pope John and his special secretariat dealing with Jewish affairs have taken the first steps to eradicate anti-Semitism. For the Pope knew that, sooner or later, anti-semitic movements become anti-Christian movements.

* * * *

A similar attitude was taken at the last session of the Protestant World Council of Churches which met in New Delhi where a resolution denouncing anti-semitism as "absolutely irreconcilable with the profession and practice of the Christian faith" was adopted unanimously. Protestant churches of all denominations were urged to combat any manifestation of anti-semitism.

Now, in the face of the new debate in our community regarding the swastika epidemics, seemingly one facet of our public relations work has been ignored: Jewish leadership especially ought to discuss with Christian clergymen of all denominations their duty to preach from the pulpit their abhorrence of anti-semitism.

A significant milestone for Israel — from student to president of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. A visit with Dr. Eliahu Elath.

By BERNICE DYMENT

When one realizes that the Hebrew University of Jerusalem has a student body of some 8,000 young men and women from 63 countries of the world, one begins to gain some conception of the stature of man required to fulfill the duties as its top administrator.

And Israel had just such a man—Eliahu Elath—diplomat, foreign affairs expert, Arab specialist, professional trouble-shooter, and outstanding scholar and author as well. He assumed the presidency this past spring and, as one of his first official duties, accepted the invitation of the Toronto Chapter, Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University, to address its annual dinner early this month.

Notwithstanding this was Dr. Elath's first visit to Canada, Prime Minister Pearson and he are longtime friends, from those crucial days in 1947 when the destiny of Palestine was being decided, and Canada's Prime Minister was then chairman of the Palestine Committee of the United Nations.

Leafing through some background material on Eliahu Elath's career, prior to meeting him in person, I was especially fascinated by an article about him which appeared in September, 1950, after his appointment as Israel's Ambassador to the Court of St. James:

"The gifted son of a well-to-do Jewish merchant in a small Russian town sets out from home to fulfill his father's dearest wish-that his son become a doctor. While attending the great university at Kiev, the young student becomes imbued with the idealism of a dynamic new cause called Zionism. In the Russia of that day, this was an illegal subject, therefore when the police caught him attending a secret meeting they threw him into prison for a one-year term. Released at the expiration of his sentence, the 21-year-old Elath (a name he assumed later) decided to go to Palestine and put his idealism into practical service.

"The journey was long and hard — crossing borders secretly, travelling by road and sea but, at last — The Promised Land. He forsook his father's dream, and fulfilled his own. The young medical student became a farm laborer, tending the barren soil of his new home land. In the course of his labors he came into contact with the Arabs of the region, and observed with great interest their ways of life and age-old customs. Realizing even then, that one day peace and security might depend on understanding of each other by Arabs and Jews living side by side, the young man decided to enroll in the newly-opened School of Oriental Studies at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. The year was 1927.

"His diligence earned him a scholarship, and this enabled him to go to Syria where he joined a tribe of Bedouins, living as one of them, learning their language, and moving with them across the desert, from oasis to oasis, for a period of eight months.

Upon graduation, he was awarded another scholarship (by the Rockefeller Foundation) to study at the American University at Beirut. Then followed another extensive period of wanderings with Bedouins, from which he emerged as a leading authority on tribal affairs. The two books he wrote, "The Bedouins, Their Lives and Customs", and, "The Population of Transjordan", are still considered classics in their field.

"Telescoping the years that follow, he serves the Jewish Agency from 1934 until the outbreak of World War II, works in Turkey for the transit of European Jewish refugees, is engaged in a multitude of rescue operations in a number of countries, and then in 1945 goes to the United States as Jewish Agency observer at the San Francisco Conference.

"In May, 1948, after President Truman's recognition of the State of Israel, he was appointed Israel's first Ambassador to the United States and, in 1950, to a similar post in London, which he held for an eventful decade."

His romantic interest evolves about the Hebrew University for there the handsome sociology student met petite and pretty Zehava, a Jaffa-born Sabra. They were married in 1932, and Zehava Elath today is one of Israel's leading sculptresses.

As for the gleanings of my own interview with Ambassador Elath at his Park Plaza press conference, space permits only some random comments. He spoke, for example, of the role the Hebrew University plays in the field of medical research — 300 projects are currently underway, commissioned by foreign governments (mostly the U.S.), and of the unique importance of the University "as a laboratory for many new ideas and experiments of world interest."

On the threat of a United Arab Republic, Dr. Elath commented, "As much as we are afraid of a United Arab world, we are MORE afraid of Arab di-unity, for Israel may then serve as a scapegoat of Arab weakness. Arms are a terrible burden for Israel. It is still cheaper to produce teachers and universities than armaments. But there is no substitute for security, so Israel must always look towards maintaining sufficient strength for her own defense."

On eventual peace with her Arab neighbours: This may come about without political settlement, but rather through the development of projects of mutual benefit, such as the Jordan Waters Scheme. Only when you have something to lose, do you hesitate to go to war.

On relations with West Germany: We must live not only in historical but practical terms. We Jews can never forgive or forget the destruction of millions of our people by Hitler's Germany — the reparations we received were not in recompense for these lives but for the property destroyed and for the fact that Israel was the recipient of the displaced Jew from Hitler's Europe. Many psychological and moral reasons underlie the clash between the two outlooks on relations with Germany — the emotional, and the practical. It will take generations to overcome.

DIPLOMAT-SCHOLAR: Hebrew University President Eliahu Elath.

On trade relations with African states: Israel has a natural market in these new states for one of her major items of export — fertilizers and through the Port of Elath, easy access to these markets. In return, Israel imports raw materials from them. It's like the case of the calf and the cow — not only does the calf need the milk, but the cow also needs to get rid of it.

The sponsoring group for Ambassador Elath's visit to Toronto is hopeful that his presence will spur the success of their new project, the Family Endowment Plan, to provide the Hebrew University with substantial endowment funds for present and future needs.

BETH JACOB DINNER HUGE SUCCESS

Toronto's Beth Jacob High School for Girls held its first annual banquet Thursday evening, June 4th, at Torath Emeth Synagogue, Viewmount Avenue.

Dr. Joseph Kaminetsky of New York City, noted Jewish educator and national director of Torah Umesorah, was guest speaker.

Rabbi M. Burak, of Beth Jacob Synagogue chaired the dinner which was opened by Rabbi M. J. Bobrowsky, president of Beth Jacob High School.

Greetings were extended by: Harry Korolnek, president, Eitz Chaim Schools; Rabbi Walter S. Wurzburger, spiritual leader of Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue; Rabbi Bernard Rosensweig of Shaarei Tefillah; Rabbi Gedalia Felder, president, Toronto Rabbinical Council.

Appreciation for untiring effort was tendered Mr. Sam Wortsman, treasurer, who made a moving appeal.

Miriam Jakter, a tenth-grade student, outlined the various activities of grades ten and eleven.

A building housing more classes is being contemplated, for which the campaign goal of Beth Jacob this year is $36,000.

Rabbi Shlomo Freifeld of New York is principal of the high school.

From its very humble beginnings little more than forty-years ago in the Polish city of Cracow, Beth Jacob now extends to the four corners of the earth. More specifically has this powerful educational institution taken root right here in Toronto where countless number of young girls attaining womanhood are imbued with the incentive of creating a Jewish home.

JEW FACES GERMAN (II)

It is particularly in Frankfort-On-The-Main, once called " the Jerusalem of Central Europe", that one poignantly feels the tragedy of German Jewry. One is overwhelmed especially by this feeling of sorrow while walking along the main streets of Frankfort on a Saturday morning or afternoon.

* * * *

Frankfort was the center of Jewish orthodoxy up to Hitler's advent to power. It was here on the River Main, not far from the original Rothschild house, that Samuel Raphael Hirsch wrote his famous "Letters to Uziel" and conceived the idea of an independent orthodox Jewish community to counteract the assault of "liberal" and "reform" modernism. In the dictionary of Jewish community life and in the concept of our ideological battles of what Judaism should be, Frankfort became the symbol of intransigent orthodoxy, garbed in a modern cloak.

It was close by, in Bad Homburg (a small resort), that the greatest among the eastern European rabbis (such as Reb Hayim Brisker) met tete-a-tete for the first time the leaders of the Hirsch school. It was from here that the Agudat Israel, a political movement of orthodox Jews formed to counteract the influence of Jewish secularism, was launched. And it was Frankfort that inspired the leaders of religious Jewry in Poland to organize politically, to use modern instruments of propaganda, such as press and literature, for the defense of ancient values. "Torah im derekh eretz" (Torah with worldliness but without secularism) was Frankfort's contribution to Judaism. Its most eloquent proponent, the universally revered Dr. Jacob Rosenheim who miraculously escaped Germany before the outbreak of war, still lives — long past the age of ninety, in Israel; the man who, for decades, stormed the citadel of political Zionism while encouraging the upbuilding of the Jewish land, paradoxically is one of the few world Jewish leaders who forsook New York for Tel Aviv.

* * * *

Nothing remains in today's Frankfort of the movement which Rosenheim has built, including the famous newspaper, "Israelit". Like many important Jewish ideas born in Germany, Frankfort has migrated overseas and lives on among orthodox Jews in England, the United States, Canada and Israel.

Before the war, on a Saturday morning thousands of Jews, men and women, were seen walking to and from the synagogues. Many stores were closed on the Jewish Sabbath. Today all this is gone, though a small Jewish community of several thousand survives and Frankfort has become the center of the Jewish social rehabilitation work in Germany.

* * * *

Perhaps it is symbolic that my first encounter in Frankfort was with the head of the Jewish burial society. (Miraculously the cemetery has survived and some of the most famous monuments, including the Rothschild mausoleum, still stand).

In contrast to others in German Jewish communities, the most active leader in the area, Alfred Weichselbaum, head of the Hevra Kadisha, is a Frankfurter. Scion of a well known Hasidic family of Galicians, Weichselbaum, relatively young and extremely energetic, is determined to rebuild Jewish life in the beloved city of his birth despite all that transpired.

A businessman with a profound Jewish education, he is dedicated to rebuilding the Jewish community. Noteworthy is the fact that he started as Jews always do when creating a new community—by tending the cemetery.

Though a believer in the renascence of German Jewry, Weichselbaum considers himself a Zionist. He is a leader of the new Zionist organization in Germany. Another interesting characteristic of this remarkable and energetic man: Zionism, from his childhood on, is deeply rooted; it stems from the Revisionist Betar movement to which he still claims allegiance notwithstanding the fact that he disagrees with Herut on the German issue. His Zionist hero is Vladimir Jabotinsky.

An engrossing activity which Weichselbaum pursues relentlessly and devotedly is the education of the young. He and others like him are determined to reestablish a Jewish school system is Germany. So far, they have succeeded here, in Frankfort, more than anywhere else in Germany.

* * * *

Frankfort has an energetic orthodox rabbi in the person of Isaac Emil Lichtigfeld. Dr. Lichtigfeld was ordained in Galicia. He lived most of his adult life in Dusseldorf where he had been a lawyer accredited to the Court of Appeal. A refugee in England during the war years, he returned here, moved by altruistic motives, as spiritual leader to revive Frankfort, for no other rabbi of stature would come back to Germany.

Dr. Lichtigfeld impressed me more than any rabbi I met in present day Germany (though my interview with him was shorter than with any other personality). Rabbi Lichtigfeld did not seek publicity. He refused to pose for a photograph; he insisted he had more important things to do. He believes his duty lies in serving the creation of something which may bring about a new development in Jewish history.

* * * *

It is in Frankfort where one finds more dedicated younger Jews than anywhere else in Germany. A famous university professor, Dr. Lewin is in the leadership of the Jewish community. One finds other intellectuals in the Zentrale Wohlfahrsstelle, which is actually the leading organization of the renascent German Jewish community. The Bonn government works closely with this organization according to its policy to help rebuild Jewish life in the country. At a meeting in the offices of this social welfare center, Mr. Max Wilner and others showed me impressive figures of their activities.

One cannot help but succumb to the spirit of dedication prevalent here — the reorganization of a community which is effectuated with typical German efficiency and organizational know-how.

* * * *

Yet another remarkable person I met in the Frankfort cemetery is a Mr. Horowitz, a Polish Jew who devotes his time to the reconstruction of tombstones. He walks among the rebuilt graves, pointing out the redesigned inscriptions with the pride of an artist who admires the progress of a great creative achievement.

Perhaps Mr. Horowitz is symbolic of the confusion which greatly characterizes the goings-on in the new German Jewish community. For the visitor who remembers the Frankfort of pre-Hitler days cannot but marvel at the contrast between the fervent activity within the reborn Jewish community and the lack of any Jewishness in the streets once vibrant with Jewish life.

In Frankfort too I met still another type of Jew symbolic of the rebirth in part of German Jewry. He is Leopold Goldschmidt, leader of the Organization of Christians and Jews who, day in and day out, works for the rapprochement between German and Jew. Goldschmidt is originally from Prague. He remembers the great of his generation: Franz Kafka,

The first Batmitzvah solemnised in the United States forty years ago, marked the religious coming of age of Judith Kaplan, eldest daughter of Rabbi Mordecai M. Kaplan, the founder of Reconstructionsm. When young Judith Kaplan (now Mrs. Ira Eisenstein and known in her own right as a noted musicologist) read a portion of the Law and the Haftarah, the Orthodox thunder, Conservative rumblings and the Reform movement's wonderment all pointed to the innovation as another proof of Rabbi Kaplan's unregenerated "heresy".

But today there are few congregations — Orthodox ones not excepted — that fail to mark the twelfth birthdays of their members' daughters with special ceremonies, usually known as "Batmitzvah".

Customs and Batmitzvah ceremonies have not as yet been standardised. As a result, it is differently observed by different communal trends — and even by the various synagogues affiliated to national synagogue federations representing Conservatism, Orthodoxy, Reconstructionism and Reform. Many Conservative and all Reconstructionist and Reform synagogues assign to the Batmitzvah girl the same functions as the Barmitzvah boy, at regular Shabbat morning services.

Those Orthodox congregations which have accepted Batmitzvah usually have the celebration during late Friday evening services and they do not call the girls to the Torah or permit them to read a portion of the Law. However some Orthodox congregations allow the Batmitzvah celebrant to read the Haftarah (but not at Shabbat morning services).

As Conservative congregations range over a very wide spectrum — from synagogues which are more traditional than some "modern Orthodox" congregations to temples which are indistinguishable from their Reform counterparts — Batmitzvah is all things to Conservative synagogues. Some follow the Orthodox manner of Friday night observance while others — and they are the majority — place the girls on a level of complete equality with the boys.

But one thing is certain. The "heresy" of forty years ago has now become one of the most firmly entrenched synagogue rituals observed with "orthodox" devotion.

The current United States controversies over the Jewish religious rites of passage are concerned with the ages of the celebrants. Unfortunately, for most youngsters the ceremony marking Jewish adulthood is the signal for freedom from Jewish obligations. Barmitzsvah and Batmitzvah, the rabbis and educators complain, marks the graduation from the Hebrew school and synagogue and not a firmer commitment to Jewish learning and living.

There have been numerous proposals to advance the age of Barmitzvah and Batmitzsvah to fifteen or sixteen. One of the most constructive and detailed plans has been presented by Mr. Philip Arian, Educational Director of Temple Israel (Conservative) of Albany, N.Y. The trouble is that the thirteen-year-old Barmitzvah boy and the twelve-year-old Batmitzsvah girl are such firmly established images, that it will be very difficult to replace them with a more mature reality.

Rabbi Solomon B. Freehof in his recently-published book "Reform Jewish Practice", reminds us that Batmitzvah, as currently practised in Orthodox congregations, "was developed in Germany and not earlier than the fourteenth century." When it was introduced, some noted scholars objected, especially on the ground that the celebrant was immature. Rabbi Freehof quotes the Maharshal (Rabbi Solomon Luria, 1534-1572) who wrote: "Indeed, the Barmitzvah ceremony itself does not seem right to me for most boys at this age do not yet have the physical evidence of puberty."

Although the Batmitzvah girl has been completely emancipated in most synagogues and temples, she is still discriminated against in the all-important realm of catering. Batmitzvah festivities are usually much more modest than those of the Barmitzvah. The argument is — and girls accept it with understanding and in good graces — that the father of the bride is expected to pay for the wedding. And the wedding, of course, is the day of the bride rather than of the groom.

Functions involving catering are expensive these days when the standard cost for a medium-priced "sit-down meal" (as opposed to a "stand-up" buffet) is about $12.00 a plate, excluding the very expensive "extras". One hears of Barmitzvah celebrations costing $10,000 and more, and of equally "splurging weddings". Few families can afford to budget such large sums (or even more modest amounts) for the rites of passage of one child. So the boys have the big Barmitzvah and the girls the big wedding.

COURTESY PLUS

A dog dashed into the village butcher shop and ran off with a chunk of meat between his teeth. Thereupon the butcher grabbed his meat cleaver and brandishing it, ran after the thief.

"What's happened?" a neighbor inquired?

"A dog has run off with a chunk of meat!"

"So why the cleaver?" cried the neighbor after him. "Do you have to chop the meat up for him?"

REMEDY

Motke once came to an inn. He was ravenous, but all the innkeeper's wife could give him was some chopped chicken liver with a slice of white radish. Of course, he didn't sleep all night.

Next morning the innkeeper's wife asked him, "Motke, you're a man of the world and get around a lot, so tell me: what's a good poison with which to get rid of the rats in this inn?"

"Why ask me?" replied Motke. "Give them some of your chopped liver and I guarantee you'll never see them again!"

SACRIFICE

Froyim went into an inn and ordered supper. When the meat course was placed before him he saw a tiny bit of roast. At this he burst out wailing. The startled innkeeper ran up to him and cried, "What is it? What's happened?"

"Happened!" wept Froyim. "To think that just because of this little morsel of meat a great big ox had to be killed!"

A WELCOME GUEST

SHRAGAI IN TORONTO

Shlomo Zalman Shragai, head of the Immigration Department of the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem, will be Toronto's guest this coming weekend. Mr. Shragai, one of the founders of the Religious Zionist Labor Movement, an author of distinction and a philosopher, will be welcomed by all Zionists in our city.

Himself a Halutz, Mr. Shragai has a right to speak to Jews in the Diaspora about Aliyah, the religious, Zionist duty of a Jew to go up to and settle in the Holy Land.

There has been a discussion often climaxing into a hot dispute whether a Zionist is one who remains in the Diaspora or who personally realizes his Zionist aspirations by living in Zion.

Mr. Shragai will not settle this dispute, for in a society of free speech, everyone has the right to define Zionism or, for that matter, Judaism, as he wishes and as he sees them. But, in the final analysis, the logic of Zionism implies serious consideration of Aliyah. And on this point, Zionists are unanimous.

S.O.S. FROM FRANCE

WE MUST HELP!

The Joint Distribution Committee which is supported by Toronto's United Jewish Appeal, received the following report from Paris, France:

Last summer's influx of refugees from Algeria intensified a problem already troubling the French Jewish community — the integration of North African Jewish youth.

In the many-sided effort to meet both the material and psychological needs of the newcomers French Jews are receiving financial and technical assistance from the JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE, with United JEWISH APPEAL funds.

But there is a widespread concern that unless something is done — and done quickly — to channel the young strangers into constructive activities, they will become a "lost generation."

"These young people arrived in France in a state of shock because of the things they had seen during the reign of terror in Algeria," one youth worker said. "They saw so much violence that they acquired abnormal attitudes and values. And because their schooling was interrupted, they lack both the educational and vocational skills they need to fit into the French way of life."

The Fonds Social Juif Unifie, French Jewish welfare agency, is attacking the youth problem from a number of directions — community and youth centers, summer camps, scout troops, student associations and educational, vocational and social services all have their role to play.

Even though the social agencies are plagued by acute shortages of funds and personnel, a great deal is being done. Where, as in Paris and some cities in the provinces, youth programs already exist, they are being expanded. In the suburban housing developments around Paris and Marseilles and smaller towns which previously had no Jewish communities, they are being created from scratch.

An impressive new development is the youth program set up by the FSJU after a planning meeting which was attended by French Jewish community leaders and youth workers.

It is based on the successful JDC-subsidized youth movement developed in Morocco by a dynamic former Scout leader named Edgard Guedj, and now being suited to the needs of the young North Africans in France.

One problem plaguing all youth groups and services is the shortage of trained personnel. An effort is being made to utilize the considerable potential for youth leadership among the North Africans themselves, with considerable success. Training seminars for young North African adults have been organized on a regional basis. Usually they have had to be fitted into holiday periods so as not to conflict with the trainees' regular jobs.

Despite the difficulties — the sudden influx of large numbers of refugees, the lack of facilities and the shortage of qualified youth workers — the French Jews are making every effort to mobilize their resources. For the integration of North African youngsters is important not only for them — but for the future of the French Jewish community.

Canadian Panorama

INCIDENT ON ULSTER STREET —

To those who read the newspaper accounts (including the Canadian Press despatch) the case of the two youths who attacked the rabbi on Toronto's Ulster Street after dark had all the earmarks of a vicious and brutal Nazi-type street assault, coming as it did on the crest of a wave of swastika paintings. To this observer who was present in Magistrate's Court "B" on the Monday morning after the incident, it looked like something quite different—a "cops and robbers" game—a game, to be sure, that misfired and had its share of wilful and sadistic mischief, but a game nevertheless.

The defendant was a 17-year-old boy living with his family on Bellevue Avenue. In stunted size, he appeared more like 13, his head hardly reaching over the edge of the prisoner's dock. His associate did not appear for, being under age, he was summoned in Juvenile Court. Accosting the bearded, ear-locked Hasid, one of them thrust a toy pistol into his back and, in the usual words, threatened: "Stick 'em up or I'll kill you!" One can imagine the effect this had on the rabbi, himself a survivor of the Hitler death camps.

The boys then ran down the street and pointed the pistol at a small girl who was standing on the sidewalk. When a passer-by complained of the noise they were making, one of the boys "warned": "Don't talk to him like that, he's a detective: "Then, just as suddenly as they had appeared, they scattered, suspecting probably that the real police were near.

The magistrate peered down at the boy before him in the prisoner's dock and wondered aloud: "How did you ever get into this mess—with two charges on your record?" The boy had been arraigned on common assault and possession of a dangerous weapon. (A toy pistol, when used in this way, is adjudged a dangerous weapon for, after all, it can provoke real gunplay when flashed, for instance, in a bank hold-up).

The magistrate proposed dropping the dangerous weapon-charge and the Crown readily agreed. "You're in bad enough shape with the one charge on your record at seventeen," remarked the magistrate, deciding that suspended sentence and a year's probation would do it in this case as the boy was led off. (At 17, incidentally, the youth attends grade nine class at a downtown secondary school).

Coming at the height of the swastika-daubings, the interpretation the press took was understandable. What is more, nothing that was printed was inaccurate — there was an attack in a technical sense and a gun was used, albeit a toy. No one can cavil at the factuality of the reports in the dailies. But the look of the very small boy standing in the dock unable to explain why he had done what he did was a far different picture than one conveyed by the news account. His "boyish mischief" somehow or other had badly misfired; suddenly his playful prank had landed him in serious trouble with the law.

This is not a plea for "innocent fun", dear reader. It is this writer's view that he was properly in court for his callous joke; but, whatever it was, it could not be linked with the wave of ugly Hakenkreutz swabbing.

TORONTO IN LOS ANGELES

That Otsrovtze, Ozherov, Minsk, Tsouzmer, and Wirbznick have their landsmanshaft is by now a well known phenomenon. We all know of the Hilfsvereinen, Sick Benefit societies and mutual aid organizations based on common origin in the same small town. But how many know that Toronto too has its own landsmanshaft — its own organization based on memories of Leonard Avenue and St. Andrew Street? Where? In Los Angeles, of course, whose population is made up of mass migrations from other centers. Following is from a recent issue of the B'nai B'rith Messenger there (whose name, by the way, is unrelated to the fraternal order of the same name):

The Toronto-Los Angeles Social Club will hold its Mother's Day celebration on Wednesday, May 22 at 8:30 p.m., highlighted by the crowning of the Mother of the Year. Entertainment will be provided by Fay Kalen, singer; Sam Zucker, mandolin player; Adolph Temionoff, actor; and Regina Bergman, ball-adiston (sic) actress.

Donation is $1.50 per person with proceeds to the City of Hope. For information call Isobel Pelston, VE. 8-7233 or Belle Cutler, WE. 3-1028.

Chaplain of the group, incidentally, is Rabbi Samuel Sachs, formerly of Goel Tzedec on University Avenue.

AT THE CONFERENCE

Ex-Torontonians at the National Conference of Jewish Communal Service held recently in Cleveland were Ruby Goldstein, Bert Gold, Martin Cohn. Other Torontonians in professional or Communal service in other centers are Aaron Feld (Winnipeg), William Weinstein (St. Louis), Bernie Shiffman, Norman Edell (Syracuse), Percy Abrams (New York), Lou Zimmerman and Sid Olyan (both of Vancouver).

HAVEN OF EMBEZZLERS

With the increase of cases of Canadians who pack up and leave for Israel when suspicion falls on them of having absconded, embezzled or misused funds, it becomes paramount that some arrangement be made between Canada and Israel for extradition procedures that woud eliminate the exodus to the Holy Land of suspected embezzlers.

It would indeed be an irony of fate if a land born of idealism and self-sacrifice should become a haven for fugitives from justice taking advantage of the historic "Law of Return" which says that any Jew has the right to enter Israel.

Incidentally, rumour hath it that one such Canadian who wound up in Israel was elected treasurer of the kibbutz he entered. After attempting a second fraud there, he now is becoming acquainted with the interior of Israel's prisons.

RABBI SACHS RETIRES

The Los Angeles Jewish Voice announces that Rabbi Samuel Sachs is retiring as spiritual leader of Congregation Mishkon Tephilo in Venice, California. Samuel Sachs served the Goel Tzedec in Toronto from the late 1920's until after World War II and was prominent in Jewish education, Canadian Jewish Congress and Zionist work.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

SELF-EXAMINATION

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and he will show them His Covenant". —(Psalm 24:14)

We live in an age when everything must be put to the test. It must be analysed and examined minutely and upon the positive or negative results obtained we base our approach to life and its problems. It is not surprising that the adoption of such methods causes happiness to escape us, for the more we delve into the mysteries of life the more we find the solution elusive.

This desire to probe and examine is so dominant that every trend of thought, every suggestion made by others is subjected to close scrutiny. More often than not it is other men's actions which are submitted to the test. The one thing which is not subjected to such gruelling examination is oneself, one's own thoughts and actions. It is so much easier to delve into the thoughts and motives of others; to see their faults and their weaknesses. To indulge in close self-examination is harder and demands greater precision and accuracy. In this fast moving world there seems to be no time to adopt such an exercise and even less inclination. More's the pity. Perhaps if we were to see ourselves at closer quarters we might see just those faults and mistakes which we attribute to others and thus avoid contributing to the pool of human conflict which we invariably denounce as being harmful to society.

This need for self-examination is one of the basic tenets of religion. To a person of a religious frame of mind the rod of measurement and comparison is the quality of him who judges not of him who is judged. The religious person is subjective. When he is convinced that he is beyond reproach he then turns his attention to others. How wise and ethically correct were the sages who said, "Correct thyself and then correct others", or as the Perek puts it, "Judge not thy neighbour until thou place thyself in his position".

Even to such a person actuated by the highest religious principles there are obviously a number of problems which give the appearance of being almost insuperable. But this does not deter him from leading a full and useful life. He is aware of his limitations hence he may neither accept nor reject but he is ever willing to see a possible solution. He attunes his mind to the reality of the problem and turns to the source of all mysteries in the confident hope that in time the solution will be made known to him. He is content to rely on his faith. He finds contentment in the prophetic assertion, "The righteous lives by his faith". The unanswered query and the unsolved mystery do not disturb the even tenor of his life.

This is not to be confused with mental indolence; nor is it to be regarded as a transference of responsibility to others. It is a healthy attitude of mind which equips him with the ability to face life's struggles. It is not the closing of the mind to possible solutions, for this would not be humble faith but arrogant pride. He who thinks he knows all the answers, in fact knows but little. The world, life, religious faith are all part of the great divine mystery of which human beings know all too little. The inner secrets of that mystery are in God's keeping. Man will receive but hazy insight into them when, in deep self-examination and in humble and contrite fear of God, he begs to be admitted into the convenant of knowledge.

Direct From Brussels

COMMON MARKET NOT READY FOR GENEROSITY

BRUSSELS, Belgium (JCNFS) — There is little optimism at the Avenue de la Joyeuse Entree, headquarters of the European Economic Community, where the delegations of Israel and the Common Market meet for the second round of talks this week.

The E.E.C. is still living under the shadow of the crisis which came to a head with last January's breakdown of negotiations with the United Kingdom. It is obvious that the shadow of the break with Britain looms over everything in Brussels, including the negotiations with Israel.

For the Israelis, the meagre results of the first round and the even more disappointing stand taken by the E.E.C. Council of Ministers on April 2, has left little hope that the Market is ready to grant anything approaching the "comprehensive and dynamic" agreement for which Israel pleaded.

When the report of the delegation conducting the talks with Israel was discussed on April 2 by the Council of Ministers, it was agreed to suggest a 20 per cent non-discriminatory Customs reduction on the import by E.E.C., members of Israeli swimming-suits, fertilizers and grapefruit — three out of the list of more than 150 items which Israel sells in Western Europe.

According to estimates such a limited reduction in tariffs would bring in about $84,000 per year, a sum barely covering the costs of Israel's prolonged attempts to reach a modus vivendi with the Six.

However, the decision on the three items has not been officially submitted to the Israeli Government. They are not, therefore, the basis of the talks which are due to resume next week.

But, from talks with officials of the E.E.C. Commission during a recent brief visit to Brussels, one got the impression that whatever might be suggested to the Israelis at the talks will be only slightly more generous than the crumbs proffered by the Ministers.

The expectation is that, following the new round of negotiations, which may last two weeks, the list of Israeli export items for which reduced tariffs will be applied will include more than three products. The extent of the reductions may be higher in some cases than the 20 per cent mentioned in the Minister's decision.

But there is a new and more important element. Israel now sees a chance of a permanent mixed commission being established to discuss on a regular basis the difficulties which Israel's foreign trade might come up against as a result of E.E.C. policy.

This hope — tariff concessions for a limited number of export items and the establishment of a mixed commission — is based on the Persian precedent.

While no trade agreement between the Common Market and Persia has yet been signed, it is understood that at the E.E.C.-Persian talks early in May it was agreed that Persia be given a 20 per cent Customs reduction on four items — carpets, caviar, dried apricots and raisins.

While this may appear to be very little, it must be remembered that two other major Persian export items are oil and cotton, both totally exempt from E.E.C. import duty.

In carpets and caviar Persia is the major exporter to the Market, so that the concession affects at least 50 per cent of Persia's total exports to the E.E.C.

While Israeli experts in Brussels may hold to the demand for a comprehensive agreement, at least officially, they will point, no doubt to the Persian precedent and insist that any agreement should cover at least 50 per cent of Israel's exports to the European Economic Community.

An itemized agreement affecting the majority of exports may be more difficult to reach in Israel's case, since these are spread over a wide range of goods and commodities, in most of which Israel is not the principal supplier.

Another difficulty arises from the fact that E.E.C. insists that its agreements be non-discriminatory i.e., that under the "most favoured nation" clause of the Gatt agreement any concession granted to Israel may be requested by any other member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The comprehensive agreement demanded by Israel would have to be the subject of a special Gatt ruling permitting the granting of concessions to Israel only.

Israel is entering the second round of talks in a "wait and see" frame of mind. Friends indicate that at present more concessions than those now being offered are unlikely. But the situation is not unchangeable.

The Grossman Case

GLOBE & MAIL DENOUNCES ATTACK AGAINST COMMISSIONER

The Globe and Mail, Canada's leading daily, strongly denounced last week those (in the press) who tried to discredit the Hon. Allan Grossman, Minister Without Portfolio, and Chief Liquor Commissioner of Ontario. Editorializing on the "Grossman Case" which became front page following stories and editorial comment in the Daily Star, the Globe and Mail stated on June 3rd:

"In the light of the facts, Mr. Grossman's attackers discredit only themselves. The self-appointed moralists should learn that there is a difference between being vigilant and being a meddlesome busybody."

The Star had caused a commotion when it disclosed that Mr. Grossman's wife had a minor interest in a company which also owns some bars. Mr, Grossman promptly denounced this attack and stated that, despite the appearance of "appearance" of conflict of interest, he had tried, unsuccessfully to have Mrs. Grossman dispose of her stock. Unfortunately, there were no buyers. He then reported this to former Prime Minister Frost and later to Premier Robarts. Robarts, in a special statement exonerating Grossman and stressing Grossman's integrity, confirmed that he was informed by the Minister of the existence of such a problem prior to his accepting the post.

The Toronto Daily Star followed with a new editorial against Grossman despite the fact that it did not question the Minister's personal integrity. It clamored for a special code of conduct for government officials.

The Telegram editorially described Mr. Grossman's performance exemplary and called him "an excellent public servant in (his) field" but asked that his wife dispose of the stock. The Telegram editorially concluded by asking that the case be closed.

THEATRE IN TORONTO

by BARBARA I. PEARL

swan lake masterpiece

With the presentation of the classical Swan Lake, the Royal Ballet culminated last Sunday night at the O'Keefe Center in an evening of excitement and satisfaction.

Always a favorite, this time Swan Lake became an electrifying experience by the interpretations of superb Dame Margot Fonteyn and her partner, sensational Rudolf Nureyev.

As Prince Siegfried, Nureyev is obsessed by his passion for the enchanted swan, Odette. His feelings of remorse become overwhelming when he realizes how he was tricked into a betrothal with Odile by magician Von Rothbart (Leslie Edwards) and his princess mother (Gerd Larsen).

Nureyev knows he is master of his art — and deserves to revel in his glory. Watching him perform, one does not see a young man smug in his convictions, but rather an artist who transcends above everything human into a sphere of make-believe.

Margot Fonteyn as Odette-Odile was almost ethereal. True, her piroettes were not so frequent as formerly. Nevertheless she holds her own and still can outdance a younger ballerina.

Fonteyn and Nureyev make a perfect team. Both very fluid, their motions blend in absolute unison.

Supporting cast was magnificent. Pas de Trais and Pas de Six were executed beautifully and precisely. Mavis Osborn as the peasant girl danced enchantingly.

John Lanchbery as conductor for the Tchaikovsky music provided the appropriate background.

HERE ONCE AGAIN—Harry Belafonte, sexy folksinger, makes a long-awaited return engagement at O'keefe Center for three weeks from Tuesday, June 11th through Saturday, June 29th, with full cast.

THEATRE HI-LIGHTS

• Following the footsteps of The Dalton Boys, Felicia Sanders is packing them in this week at Hamilton's The Carillion Tavern. There are two shows nightly, at 9:30 and 12:15 a.m.

Why Botvinnik Lost World Title

by HARRY GOLOMBEK

LONDON, (JCNFS). — By scoring 12½ points to Botvinnik's 9½ in a Moscow contest lasting some two months, the Armenian grandmaster, Tigran Petrosian, became the new world champion and robbed Botvinnik of a title that he had held, on and off, ever since 1948.

It is a curious fact that now both men and women's world chess championship titles are held by natives of the Caucasus region of the U.S.S.R., Petrosian coming from Armenia and Nona Gaprindaschwili from Georgia.

The struggle for the title was, in the first half of the match, very even. During this phase in fact it was Botvinnik who was attacking and Petrosian who was defending. But, as the fight wore on, the older man visibly tired and Petrosian won game after game in the second half of the match to score a most decisive victory.

Then, in the last three games that were played it became apparent that the title holder had abandoned all hope of retaining his title.

The acquiring of the necessary 1½ points to win the match for Petrosian proved to be a pure formality.

A margin of three points in such a match must be classed as a heavy defeat and the question arises — why did it occur? Matches at this level very rarely show any disparity in skill or knowledge between the two contestants and reasons for victory or defeat must be sought elsewhere.

The first cause obviously lies in age. Botvinnik was handicapped by 18 years, Petrosian celebrating his 34th birthday during the course of the match, while Botvinnik was in his 52nd year. The strain of a five-hour session of play proved too much for the older man, and time and again Botvinnik committed oversights or made weak moves during the fifth hour of play.

The next cause is to be found in the mistaken nature of Botvinnik's preparations for the match. No one prepares his openings or indeed his whole style of play more thoroughly before a match than does Botvinnik. But, on this occasion, as the match proceeded, so it became clear that Botvinnik had taken quite the wrong point of view as to the tactics and strategy necessary to beat Petrosian.

He should have played to open up the game, instead of which he was content to allow Petrosian to steer the play into close positions. King's pawn openings would have been much more effective than the Queen's pawn he invariably played. True, as White he often obtained positions that were advantageous out of the opening; but the advantage was rarely large enough to enable him to pin down a most slippery and wily opponent. With the Black pieces Botvinnik fared even worse and he had great difficulty in securing anything near equality.

Another question that is always asked at the end of such a match is how does this world championship match compare in quality with the great matches of the past, with those, for instance, between Steinitz and Lasker, between Lasker and Capablanca, and between Capablanca and Alekhine? I have now officiated as judge at six world championship matches in succession and on every occasion, both during and immediately after the match, the games have seemed inferior in quality to those of previous matches.

Clearly, there is something in the golden dust of time that tends to cast a halo over past champions and no doubt in fifty years the Botvinnik-Petrosian match will take on the appearance of a classic encounter.

DO OR DON'T

By RUTHIE

Now that it's summer again, everybody I know is in the throes of getting her youngsters ready for camp. These mamas keep harping on the same theme over and over: it will do the kids good, maybe they'll learn to eat properly, maybe they'll respond to discipline, maybe they'll learn how to make their beds, maybe they'll come home with new perspective and appreciate their parents — oh, a million maybes.

But, no matter how true all this is, one fact stands out strong and clear: Mama can have the time of her life without worrying about Junior. The benefits of having the small fry away are enumerated, more or less, to assuage Mama's conscience.

* * * *

Upon the risk of being considered an oddball, for the life of me I can't see this wanting to get rid of the kids.

I've always enjoyed myself away from home, even with my brood tagging along.

Sure, there are aggravations. But if you want children, raise them. You can't have your cake, and eat it too. Like Papa used to say, "Bahk bagel, bahk nisht (bake bagels, don't)."

You must make up your mind, you just can't have everything.

And I'd rather encounter some inconveniences with them than worry about what could be happening (and never does).

* * * *

I remember the first holiday my husband and I took by ourselves. We left our five-months-old baby with Mama. Certainly we felt at ease — could we have gotten a better baby-sitter?

Well, when we returned, I found out that the little one had had a temperature of 103 for four days; she was teething.

Naturally, what I didn't know couldn't hurt. But that incident started my imagination working every-time I contemplated a vacation alone.

* * * *

Frankly it's not worth it. For better or worse, our children share all our holidays. Every hotel provides baby-sitters, day camps abound. And if any grievance arises, you are there. So what's so terrible about that?

I know it's fashionable for Mama to have a vacation without the kids shlepping (dragging) along; and if she can't, it's a calamity. Poor thing, my heart bleeds for her. She won't be able to sleep long mornings; she'll still have to supervise breakfast even though she doesn't have to prepare it.

Well, as my Mama always says, "Children just don't grow like Topsy. If you want 'em, raise 'em."

I like Papa's, "Bahk bagel, bahk nisht," it's more to the point.

MONTREAL B.B. DRIVE

MONTREAL (CJN). — On Thurday, May 30th, the Montreal section of B'nai B'rith opened an intensive summer membership campaign with a dinner at the Grand Motor Hotel. Over eighty key campaign personnel assembled to hear Chairman Henry Blatt outline the need and the plans for a summer executive campaign to obtain one thousand new members.

This drive is aimed at increasing B'nai B'rith's membership by at least 2,000 new members before April 1st, 1964. which is the date when the Canadian Council of the international service organization becomes the latest District in the Order.

Mr. Blatt stated: "We have worked long and hard for the privilege of becoming an independent District. Now that we have been granted this right, we must understand that this status carries with it major responsibilities. To carry out our commitments to the Order we must increase our membership by fifty per cent over the next five years. This coming year in particular affords us the opportunity to make significant gains in membership, since there is a natural excitement and stimulation in becoming a Canadian District.

"We will never again have the golden opportunity we now have. We must not fail to capitalize fully on it."

Presidents and other executive members from nearly all the Montreal lodges attended the dinner, in addition to the campaign personnel.

The summer executive campaign is scheduled to end on July 9th, at which time Harold Brenner, Assistant Membership Director from Supreme Lodge in Washington, is planning to be in Montreal to help wind up the campaign.

NEW VATICAN STATEMENT ON CRUCIFIXION DELAYED

ROME (JCNS). — Theological experts of the Ecumenical Council's Secretariat are completing a draft document defining the Church's stand on the responsibility of the Jews in the condemnation and death of Jesus, according to the progressive Italian magazine "Il Punto".

"The document", the paper said, "would be inspired by the principle that the entire Jewish people was not quilty for the death, but only a few men who acted in bad faith. Therefore, the thesis of God's curse weighing on the entire Jewish people was expected to undergo a new re-evaluation".

Well-informed circles here disclosed that Cardinal Augustine Bea would favour the formation of an advisory liaison committee, including Protestant and Jewish personalities, to advise the Vatican Secretariat. However, the initiative is unlikely to succeed in the near future, chiefly because of the Pope's demise. His death is bound to slow down the Vatican initiative for inter-faith contacts.

The Bull Connor Award

During my visit in Birmingham to speak at the Miles College commencement, I decided to initiate an annual Bull Connor Award. The competition to be open to all high school seniors of Birmingham, white or negro. The award will include a one-year college scholarship and along with the scholarship will go a bronze medallion showing Bull Connor directing the police dogs. The reverse side of the medallion will show Negro students under the legend: "We Shall Not Be Moved," Birmingham, Alabama 1963.

I will ask Ralph McGill of Atlanta, Bill Baggs of Miami, and Harry Ashmore of Beverly Hills to act as judges for the annual Bull Connor Award. The judges will set up the rules and decide the basis for the granting of the award. The medallion will be suspended by a piece of hose rather than the usual ribbon.

Indoors - Vertical Negro

Some years ago I humorously proposed a Golden Vertical Negro Plan. I proposed since no one in the South minds standing with a Negro, we take the chairs out of all the public facilities which the Negro wants desegregated. This plan has been implemented in hundreds of places and integration has been achieved with little trouble.

The most recent institution to adopt this formula for peaceful resolution of race problems is the Albany, Ga., Public Library. The librarians took all the chairs out and the "whites" who had been so hot-headed about sharing their library with Negroes never give integration a thought now that everybody has to stand.

Outdoors - Sittin' Down

By chance, however, I have come upon another such facile and easily implemented plan.

A Southern Governor invited a few Negro political leaders to his inauguration. A few days later the Governor was visited by a delegation of indignant state legislators; "How come you invited Negroes to the inauguration?" they demanded.

Patiently, the governor explained that while Negroes and whites did indeed "mingle" at his inauguration, "no part of the ceremonies were conducted indoors." The irate segregationists went away satisfied.

HUMAN RELATIONS

Children's Bedtime

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION: My husband, I feel, makes a great fuss about the time our children should go to bed at night. We have three boys, aged 3, 5 and 10. The baby ,of course, is no problem yet. It's mostly our middle boy. It takes him hours before he falls asleep.

On school nights I agree that they should be in bed by 8 or 8:30. However, on a week-end or a holiday when there is no school the next day, my husband insists on their going to bed just as early and makes a great fuss when they don't. I feel that an hour or so later on these nights will not harm them much since they can sleep later the next morning.

ANSWER: Neither sleep nor food can be forced on a youngster. Actually, pressure often has just the opposite effect. A child can throw-up what he has eaten when he is forced to eat, and nothing keeps a child wider awake than an angry command to go to sleep immediately.

Your son of 5 is really betwixt and between in more ways than one. The older one was there first and enjoys certain privileges because he is the oldest. The little brother gets special consideration because he is the baby.

Your middle son feels threatened by both brothers. He is fearful that when he falls asleep he might lose control of the entire situation and what little position and status he has in the family could escape him.

* * * *

Every child in the family must be treated in a special way according to his age and sex and the particular phase of development he is going through. Otherwise he cannot get the feeling that he is a special and unique individual.

Putting your 5-year-old in the same class as his brother who is twice as old may well be a threat to him, rather than a reward. If he can hold the same position as the older one, then maybe the little brother can catch up with him, too.

Each of the children should have a different bedtime, according to age. The 5-year-old should retire before the oldest boy, but be permitted to stay up longer than the baby. When he sees that there are differences according to age, he will not feel caught in the middle of a race which he feels bound to lose.

A strict and punishing bedtime schedule is for some husbands a way of getting their children out of the way.

When the children are permitted to stay up, their mother may be too tired to act toward him like the loving wife he desires. The fact is that some wives, in such a situation, use their children's need of them as a means of avoiding the sexual pleasures their husbands want.

* * * *

Flexibility on the part of a parent makes it easier for children to adjust to rules. A child who is given the privilege of staying up a little later on special occasions will be more willing to abide by the ordinary rules about bedtime. Retirement is then not seen as a punishment or as an exile from the family scene.

It is good that your husband wishes to be active in the rearing of the children.

More agreement with his ideas on your part will lessen his need to assert his position in the family by disagreeing with your ways and methods and by being over-strict.

DON'T REMOVE THE SWASTIKAS!

Dear Editor

Permit me to express my complete agreement with Editor Nurenberger's Commentary in The Canadian Jewish News of Friday, June 7th, under the title "Dybbuk in Downsview". Your analysis of some of our reactions to the swastika-daubings was excellent. Whatever may be the identity or the motives of the perpetrators of these disgusting acts, nothing—will please them more than hysteria, panic, or breakdown of discipline on our part. I have full confidence that our responsible communal leaders are capable of dealing with the situation and I have full faith in our municipal authorities and the police force that they will do everything in their power to apprehend the guilty. Tempting as it may be to engage in the heroic adventure of organizing vigilantes to guard our buildings and to catch the new Nazis in the act, no such course of action can be seriously contemplated in an orderly society, which is ruled by law.

However, there is another reaction on our part which can only give comfort to our enemies and encourage them to continue their acts of vandalism. This is the very simple and understandable urge on the part of the organization whose building has been defaced to scrub off or cover up these vicious smears as quickly and as well as possible, as if they were shameful stains for us. While this reaction is quite natural, it might appear to indicate that we are ashamed, hurt and scared. The vandals believe, therefore, that they are on the right track and they will continue to exploit our sensitivity.

DON'T REMOVE THE SWASTIKAS: Let these despised symbols and hate slogans remain in full view of the public until the culprits have been brought to justice. Though our police force is trying very hard to catch those responsible for these daubings, public opinion will urge the authorities to intensify their efforts to apprehend the offenders if the Jewish community will refuse to erase these marks.

Abhorrent as these symbols are to us, they are not marks of disgrace for us when daubed on our synagogues or schools. Rather are they marks of shame for the general community since they are visible evidence and reminders that there still exist in our midst people whose minds are cesspools of hatred, depravity and perversion.

It is not a disgrace for Jews and Jewish institutions to be singled out by the forces of evil and darkness as the targets of their hatred and fury. As long as such depravity afflicts human society, we ought to be proud that they must vent their evil passions on us; that they must fear us and therefore hate us. It only confirms the evidence of history, in ancient as well as modern times, that the enemies of freedom and decency know instinctively that the Jewish people stand for the ideals which they want to destroy and that the forces of evil must try to eliminate the Jew before they can gain ascendancy.

Let every visitor to our fair city come and see what we have here in Toronto! Let us not by removing the swastikas beguile people into thinking that we have eradicated the evil which lurks in depraved human minds! And if indeed there should be an organized Neo-Nazi movement behind these outrages, as some people believe, then let the swastikas on our walls proclaim to all that the Synagogue is the embattled citadel of freedom and democracy.

JEWISH ADJUSTMENT NECESSARY IN QUEBEC

By Dr. Abraham G. Duker

Dear Editor:

I was very much impressed with the Commentary by M. J. Nurenberger, on Jewish adjustment in Quebec which appeared in the May 24th issue of The Canadian Jewish News, which I read regularly.

American Jewry has been very much concerned of late with religious pluralism and I am afraid that this debate may have affected the thinking of the Canadian Jews. If so, this would be most unfortunate, because of varying conditions.

Obviously, in Quebec, pluralism is built on both national-cultural, and religious differences. The Jews will have to adjust themselves to both aspects. Your editorial points out the way to such an adjustment.

Certainly Quebec Jewry should have its own full school system and should adjust itself to linguistic acculturation into French rather that the Anglo-Saxon culture. Anything that can be done to emphasize the role of Yiddish and Hebrew as the languages of Jewish minority will be of great help in this process of essential self-differentiation.

Thank You From B'nai B'rith

Dear Editor:

Just a note to thank you for the very complete coverage your newspaper gave to the B'nai B'rith Spring Bazaar and Carnival, which was held on May 22nd. The cooperation extended to our committee is appreciated, and contributed substantially to the success of our annual fund-raising effort. In addition, we would like to thank the general public, through the medium of your paper, for its generous support of the Carnival.

Oldest Sephardi Synagogue In Amsterdam May Close Soon

AMSTERDAM, (JCNS) — The Sephardi Congregation in Holland — now numbering about 800 people — is no longer financially able to bear the costs of maintenance of its famous old synagogue built in Amsterdam over 280 years ago, and of its cemetery at Ouderkerk, near here, where Manasseh ben-Israel is buried. Nor is the congregation able to defray the expenditure for its famous library, "Etz Hayim", adjoining the synagogue.

This was stated in the Congregation's annual report for the period April 1962-April 1963, just published.

The synagogue, which underwent extensive repairs only a few years ago, again needs to be thoroughly repaired. Since the congregation is unable to raise the necessary funds among its members, it has asked the Netherlands Government's Division for the Care of Ancient Monuments, and the Municipalities of Amsterdam and Ouderkerk for help.

ARABS THREATEN BOYCOTT OF WEST GERMAN GOODS

NEW YORK, (JCNS) — An Arab boycott of West German goods and a shift in Arab policy in favour of recognition of the East German regime, was theatened by the so-called Palestine Arab Delegation to the United Nations, it was learned here last week.

The "delegation", headed by Issa Nakhleh and Omar Azouni announced that it had cabled Dr. Adenauer on May 25 accusing West Germany of "supplying Israel with money, arms and technical assistance for manufacturing nuclear weapons". This, "makes your government an accessory to this crime against Palestine and its people."

Chancellor Adenauer is furt her accused of providing Israel with "delta-winged Mirage III fighter-interceptors, Mirage jet fighters, air transport, anti-aircraft weapons, tanks, recoil-less rifles and ammunition."

These reasons are given for the start of a campaign by "Arab Palestinians all over (the world" to urge Arab Governments to adopt a new attitude and policy towards West Germany, and grant recognition to East Germany.

RUSSIAN-JEWISH GENERAL AT YIDDISH LITERARY FUNCTION

MOSCOW, (JCNS) General Hirsh Plaskov, the Russian-Jewish Army commander whose artillery helped to conquer Berlin in May 1945, was among several hunderd Moscow Jews who last week participated in what might be termed in the first p war demonstration "in honour of Yiddish culture" in Soviet Russia.

The function was organized by "Sovietish Heimland", and took place in the Moscow offices of the journal. About 700 people, describing themselves as "readers and admirers" of the Yiddish journal, attended the gathering, including a number of high-ranking Jewish officers in the Red Army.

Dr. Aaron Vergelis, editor of "Sovietish Heimland" who presided, stated that the journal had now become very popular. "Within a short time it will take its place as the leading organ of Jewish culture in Russia", he declared, adding that over 100 Jewish writers, poets and novelists had contributed to make the journal a success.

At the end of the meeting it was announced that at least eleven Israeli writers will contribute to the forthcoming issue of the journal, among them Pesach Binetzki and the poet Alexander Penn.

Jew Faces German

Franz Werfel and, of course, Max Brod (who is living). Also, he apparently believes in cultural assimilation.

Goldschmidt fights racialism not only in theory but in practice. For example, he created a minor sensation in Germany last June when its largest weekly, Stern, published on the front page the picture of his adopted colored daughter, Heidi. ("Heidi with the dark skin" is one of the seven-thousand colored occupation children whom the Allied armies left behind as a seemingly insoluble problem).

Leopold Goldschmidt and his wife, both Jews, adopted Heidi in 1956 when she was sixteen. She considers herself Jewish. A brilliant student at the Sorbonne where she majored in philosophy and literature, beautiful Heidi Goldschmidt now is prepared to migrate to Israel where she plans to settle in a kibbutz.

She says: "My real birthday was in 1956 when I became Heidi Goldschmidt. I am Jewish and I belong to Israel."

The Goldschmidts, who have proved by this adoption how inter-racial problems can be solved, proudly assert that Heidi probably is more Jewish than they.

* * * *

This is Frankfort.

The city of Frankfort contributes more to one's sense of frustration about Germany, for here Dr. Walter Raab, administrative head of the Goethe University, has no trouble proving that there is no racialism in this foremost and illustrious German university. There seems to be no tension despite its Jewish professors and students.

Frankfort generally reminds one of Goethe. A visitor conversant with this great humanist cannot escape the names of streets reminiscent of Goethe's writings. Walking through Bettinastrasse, one remembers literary experiences of younger days. However, returning to the old Jewish neighborhood, sadness recurrs. One shuts his eyes, imagines the Jerusalem of Central Europe, and then becomes acutely aware of the calamity.

* * * *

A friend I met in Frankfort after many years, and with whom I often attended the theater in Paris, best interpreted the city and its reborn Jewish community:

— Do you remember the Parisian vanguard Theatre des Noctambules, where, in 1950, we saw the play of the then unknown Eugene Ionesco? Remember, he was a flop? Doesn't Frankfort—Jewish Frankfort — remind you of the Theatre des Noctambules (theater of sleepwalkers)? No one here seems to be aware of walking, or even existing; nor of the answer to the why and whither. . . .

AT THE CEMETERY IN FRANKFORT: from left to right—Weichselbaum, Nurenberger and Horowitz.

This is the eleventh of a series. Another installment will appear next week in THE CANADIAN JEWISH NEWS.

Golden Land... • MEMOIRS OF A COMEDIAN •

BY JAN BART

CHAPTER V

"The Wheel Of Fortune Spins"

A kid by the name of Sidney Bernstein, a classmate, sometimes would go downtown with me to see a Saturday afternoon movie.

One such afternoon in April of '35 we were walking by the Capitol Theatre when Sidney remembered that Major Bowes, America's famed impressario of the amateur shows, had a penthouse on top of the building.

"Janny-boy," says Sidney looking terribly fierce, "I'm-gonna get you an audition with Major Bowes!"

I had no chance to argue with him. He walked into the hallway of the building and actually found a phone which had a direct connection with the Bowe's apartment.

And this is what I heard Sidney saying — words which impressed me as sheer madness: "So it's true you don't know the name Sidney Bernstein. You tell the Major right now that I have here a great singer — a very great singer from Cleveland who has to be back there Monday morning. This guy's only a year from Poland — and a second Caruso. Whaddya got to lose — just tell Major Bowes...."

After a bit of listening, Sidney nodded. "Okay, we'll do just that. But we're in a hurry."

He guided me over to the elevator. A light flashed to tell the operator we had permission to be taken to the penthouse. It seemed to me that we went up and up and never would stop. Time lost its value for me, and I'd have settled for a nice kid like Sidney Bernstein shaking me awake and telling me the show was over and we had to get home.

Instead, we were ushered into a room which had a long bench in it, and on that bench we sat. I sat, that is. Sidney played it straight for about four or five minutes and then went up to an office window in one corner of the room and told someone we were waiting. Apparently the answer he got satisfied him, for he came back and sat down again.

I was too numb even to ask myself what I'd do if Major Bowes did give me a chance to sing. By the time I commenced to realize where we were and what might be in the offing, Sidney was on the prowl again.

He peered into corridors leading from the waiting room, tested a few doors, found one open, and came running back to me. "Listen," he said, "there's a baby grand in there. Get in that room and start singing. Play for youself. Sing Pagliacci!"

"You're crazy, Sid!"

"Yeah. You get in there and start singing. Leave it to me. All they could do is throw us out."

I hate to admit it but...

my brother-in-law is a 'shlemiehl'

My brother-in-law, Joe, is the sweetest man I've ever known. I love him. I love his wife; she's my sister. I love their two boys. That's why it pains me that Joe can't make a living. He works hard and he's not stupid. But he just closes his ears and his eyes to life's realities. Isn't that one way of describing a "shlemiehl"?

Joe has the most fantastic explanations for the fall-off in his business. His favorite is the weather. It's too hot or too cold; it's too rainy or too pleasant. Spring came early or it came late. Joe gets lots of customers at his neighborhood restaurant and luncheonette; the trouble is that far too many of them fail to return. What's the explanation? Don't ask Joe. He might tell you that it's the Cold War —he'll never admit that it could be cold soup.

And his wife is worse than Joe.

"Abe," she says to me, "don't talk business to Joe tonight. He's had a hard day. This isn't the right time." (No time seems to be the right time.)

"Abe, don't get excited," she says to me. "It's not good for your heart." (Believe me, it's worse for my heart when I hold things inside of me.)

"Abe," she says, "Mamma is coming for dinner. "Don't spoil the atmosphere."

Well, I did spoil the atmosphere. I talked up. I mentioned what I thought was a relatively easy subject to discuss.

"Joe," I said, "whenever I eat in a good restaurant, whether it's an expensive establishment or a successful diner or hamburger stand, I notice one thing. They all serve Heinz Ketchup. In your restaurant, you try to save a few cents; you serve another kind. It's good ketchup," I hastened to add as I saw Joe's sad expression. "Yes, you serve good ketchup, but not the best. Surely your customers must notice."

Joe took a pill out of his pocket, gulped it down furiously, and gave me one of his typical irrelevant answers:—

"Abe, what do you want of me? I run a little neighborhood luncheonette. I'm not Grossinger's."

"That's just the point," I answered. "You must act like Grossinger's—in the ketchup department, that is. All over the world Heinz is the best-selling, most popular ketchup. As things stand now, when customers eat at your restaurant, you almost announce that you are saving the few extra pennies that they, themselves, spend for ketchup in their own homes. Joe," I pleaded, "don't lead with your chin. People are influenced by little things. They don't stand up and make a speech when they're displeased. They don't write you poison pen letters. They just go somewhere else to eat."

I call that good advice! But did you change Joe? Well, that's the way I changed him. My dear brother-in-law reminds me of that classic Jewish story, "die vier okshonim," the four stubborn men.

I wish the ketchup problem was the whole trouble with Joe. It's not. It is merely an example. However, my hands are tied and I'm afraid that my tongue is tied, too.

Anyway, thanks for "listening" to my tale of woe. To reward you for your patience, I want to send you a mimeographed copy of the "vier okshonim" story (in English, of course) just in case you have never heard that very funny satirical tale.

You can reach me by addressing a postcard or letter to Abe B., Box 381, Leamington, Ontario. It's the only address you need; I have made all the necessary arrangements with the Post Office. You see, I don't want to use my real name. Why should I add to Joe's miseries?
